

Project 10

Course Code and Name: MSJ 3142 Media Relations

Project Name: ULAB Launches Humanitarian Aid Amid Bangladesh Political Crisis

Project Type: Press Release

Date of Submission: Summer 2024

Project Description:

This project involved creating a press release for ULAB's humanitarian aid and support initiative during a period of political crisis in Bangladesh. The press release communicated ULAB's relief activities, support for affected communities, and commitment to social responsibility. It was designed to provide clear information to the media while highlighting the university's role in supporting people during times of crisis.

Project Justification:

The project was created to demonstrate how effective media relations can communicate an organization's social responsibility and humanitarian efforts. A press release allows important information to reach journalists and the public in a clear, professional, and credible manner. The project also highlights how universities can use strategic communication to build public awareness and demonstrate their contribution to society during challenging situations.

“ULAB Launches Humanitarian Aid Amid Bangladesh Political Crisis”

(Empowering Communities in Times of Crisis)

Due to the current politically unstable situation in Bangladesh, ULAB has established humanitarian aid and support outreach programs to benefit the suffering populace. This clearly shows that ULAB has a strong tradition of social responsibility and the commitment of the university to help support students as well as the community during such disasters.

The political popular movement which led to the overthrow of the Awami League government was dominated by youth and particularly students. Originally spearheaded to protest against the reintroduction of the government job quota system, demonstrators soon expanded their agenda to anti-corruption initiatives, government incompetence, and authoritarian encroachment. These events bring out the importance and the possibility students have in determining the future politics of the country.

With respect to these developments, ULAB has responded accordingly by taking actions to help those affected by this crisis. The university has mobilized several relief exercises among the needy families by donating food, drugs, and clothes among others. This is a joint project aimed at improving the university's performance on the subject of helping those in need, and is implemented with the support of other organizations and active volunteers.

Even now, over five hundred families have benefited from such endeavors, with more families coming forward to join the process daily. This program shows that ULAB sticks with its mission of not only teaching students but also supporting them during tragic incidents.

The Vice-Chancellor of ULAB, Professor Imran Rahman said, “The University has always taken social responsibilities seriously, and in these times which are so difficult, it is our responsibility to help those in need.” I must admit it is really heartening to note that our students, faculty and staff are kind enough to support the frail and the needy. Undefined

The current political situation in Bangladesh has posed a lot of challenges to the inhabitants especially those found in the rural and other vulnerable provinces. Several issues have been raised due to the continued crisis, and this makes ULAB's approach a kind gesture towards the problems. To those people who are in need, ULAB strives to provide a helping hand as soon as possible, as well as help them rebuild their lives for the better in the long run.
